Lore

Once upon a time long ago, the state of San Andreas included the metropolis of Los Santos. Many flew in for business trips, for work or just to rest, some to find a quiet life. But all of this was forgotten in an instant and subsequently the once part of the state became a separate island that became the last stronghold of humanity...

Life throughout the world went on as usual, with people going to work, shopping, celebrating, and doing other mundane things. Soon, strange people began to appear on the streets of the city. Trying to understand what was happening, people began to appeal to various authorities, but no one gave an answer. People in a panic began to create various forums where these issues were discussed. Meanwhile, cities began to declare a state of emergency. The governments of the countries did not give any complete picture of what was happening and only from bits of knowledge people on the forums came to a decision about what kind of contagion was walking around the world. Infected with it, people first felt maximum fatigue in their bodies, they could not move around normally, in time, they could not control their bodies at all. They became confined to their beds. Their eyes would turn red and their breathing would become very difficult, even the special machines did not help them.

Once they had gleaned a more or less complete picture, many stayed at home, and the authorities tried to help their countries as best they could. But many things were getting out of hand. Government agencies could no longer act shoulder to shoulder. Their hands were slipping. They knew no way out, could not work a miracle. The World Health Organization stopped making any vaccine at all because absolutely all experiments were failing. Riots broke out in almost every country: people smashed and burned everything in their path. Employees of various government agencies were treated extremely negatively in almost every part of the globe. When they met them, the latter might have been glad to get home just alive. Things came to the point of idiocy. Having emptied the cities of the oppression of anarchy and chaos, people began to go out and look for food, water. Due to the low amount needed for personal sustenance, many huddled together in groups and took various provisions from the weaker ones. People began hiding anywhere, just to live another day. The authorities of the countries decided to unite and came to a very cruel decision.

A couple of years later.

Various radio and television channels broadcast messages with the following content:

If you still have your mind and you're healthy, we'll be waiting for you. The authorities won't help you anymore. Follow the central highways out of town, that's where we'll find you.

Not really trusting these messages, but having no other way out, people began to move toward the central country highways, where they were picked up by people in strange uniforms. They were subsequently evacuated, but their destination was kept secret for the safety of the survivors. After collecting as many people as possible, they were sent to safe places. This was done so that states could conduct their own eradication efforts. Biological bombs were actively dropped.

The bombs that were dropped in the states were enriched with various different chemical elements that would lead to the elimination of those creatures that had once been human. However, due to the great haste and the impossibility of conducting all the relevant experiments, a directly proportional effect from the intended one occurred. All this led after some time to some anomalies, pathologies and diseases. Among other things, various technogenic catastrophes began to occur around the world. The movement of plates, the explosion of volcanoes not from the core, but from under the ground, floods and tsunamis. It took 4 years for the earth to recover and calm down from what had happened. After the Earth's solid rock had recovered from the upheaval, most of the shelters that had been created to ensure the safety of human life were destroyed, and creatures that were even more aggressive than the previous ones began to emerge from them. They destroyed anything that showed signs of life in their path. In an attempt to re-establish communication, the organization responsible for the human life support operations after the bombs had been dropped made the decision that all be transported to the island city of Los Santos, now an island. The organization calling itself SECURITY TECHNOLOGIES had chosen Fort Zancudo as its base, and it was conducting its experiments behind its closed doors.

The people were released to a less suitable city, where they were to start life from scratch and determine the history of mankind themselves...
